01

BACKGROUND

We see some problem will come up in the future

LET'S BACKGROUND TO SEE IN THE FUTURE

When looking forward, global waste is expected to grow to 3.40 billion tonnes by 2050, more than double population growth over the same period. Overall, there is a positive correlation between waste generation and income level. Daily per capita waste generation in high-income countries is projected to increase by 19 percent by 2050, compared to low- and middle-income countries where it is expected to increase by approximately 40% or more. Waste generation initially decreases at the lowest income levels and then increases at a faster rate for incremental income changes at low income levels than at high income levels. The total quantity of waste generated in low-income countries is expected to increase by more than three times by 2050. The East Asia and Pacific region is generating most of the world's waste, at 23 percent, and the Middle East and North Africa region is producing the least in absolute terms, at 6 percent.

However, the fastest growing regions are Sub-Saharan Africa, South Asia, and the Middle East and North Africa, where, by 2050, total waste generation is expected to more than triple, double, and double respectively. In these regions, more than half of waste is currently openly dumped, and the trajectories of waste growth will have vast implications for the environment, health, and prosperity, thus requiring urgent action.

OUR INTRODUCTION

Indonesia based on statistical data from national statistic agency BPS, Badan Pusat Statistik on 2018, , it is stated that plastic waste reaches 66 million tons per year We aware that this will create a really serious problem in the (near) future, and we publicly aware of this waste problem is not an easy thing based on our experience, to change people's mindset was very difficult

In order to solve this issues, we have prepare a solid plan to answer these issues, and to build awareness about of this waste management.
